Course: Anglosphere Course Code: JPM282 Academic Year 2012/2013 Time: Mondays 5-630pm during Winter Semester Lecturer: Mgr. Antonin Mikes Office Hours: Monday 2 – 3:00 pm (or by appointment) J 3101 Email: abtmikes@gmail.com Online access for course materials. dl.cuni.cz

Course Description

The course will analyze the so-called Anglosphere, its origins and significance in international politics. Anglosphere is a broader term than Anglo-Saxon civilization (which refers to countries of Anglo-Saxon descendents) as it includes all English-speaking countries that were influenced by the British Empire and the Commonwealth of Nations. It embraces populations of countries which have much in common – language, culture and values, democratic traditions and political and legal institutions which enable them to form some sort of closer association. Thus, the course will focus on the relationship between the Anglospheric countries, their foreign policies and analyze security, political, cultural and economic links between them. It will also include several case studies of countries which hold independent positions.

Lecture and Seminars

Lectures and seminars: after every lecture students will take turns presenting on various topics. Each presentation should last approximately 30-40 minutes. Presentations will focus in detail on issues arising from the lectures (please see detailed plan of the course below). All students are also expected to have completed allocated readings and/or assignments before each seminar.

Assessment and requirements

Assessment will be based on one review of a required reading, one oral presentation, a written version of the presentation (essay!) and a final exam. Students should be present at least 70% of the lectures and seminars.

The final grade is a combination of the following items: Review of required reading – one page summary of article from syllabus= 20%Oral presentation (30-40 min long) & essay (2,000-2,500 words) = 60% of the total grade Final written exam = 20% of the total grade.
